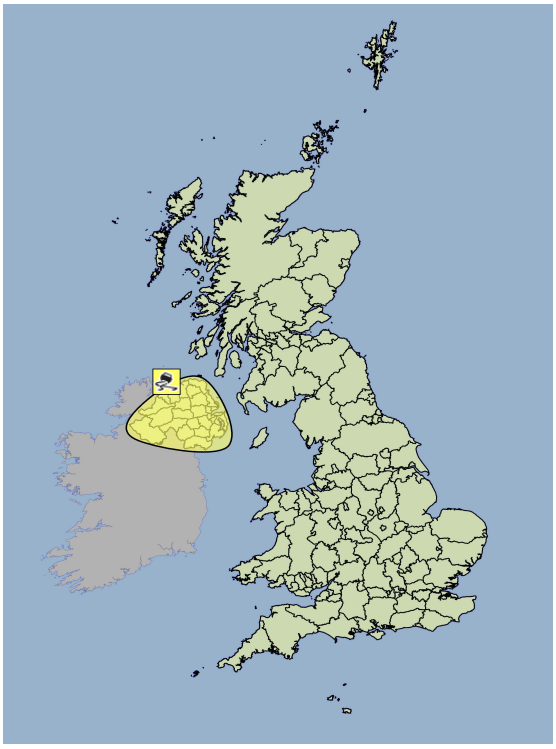
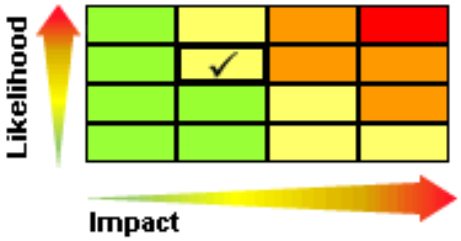
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Showers will continue into Thursday evening, before becoming more isolated again. Road temperatures will then fall below zero fairly quickly in many areas through the evening, so there is a risk of ice forming on untreated surfaces.

Later in the night, a frontal system approaching from the west will bring increasing cloud and breeze, lifting temperatures once again.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 20:00 on Thu, 18th Feb 2016 until 05:00 on Fri, 19th Feb 2016

Showers will continue into Thursday evening, with clear spells then developing allowing temperatures to fall below freezing in places, before rising from the west later in the night. Please be aware of the risk of ice on untreated roads and pavements.
